BALTIC RUM CARGO SEIZED BY AMERICAN DRY RAIDERS; CASE FOR HAGUE IS HINTED

Take Possession of Liquor, Despite Formal Protest

New York Port Officials Work Action Follows Permission of in Mystery Haze-Ordered to Halt Once

NEW YORK, June 23 (A)-Federal prohibition agents today boarded the White Star liner Baltic here, broke the British seal placed over the liquor cache, and despite formal protest by the ship's captain, I. J. Roberts, seized the wet goods and prepared to take them to the dock, later to be stored in a Government warehouse.

The new orders were made neces-Because of a series of unscheduled incidents, including hurried conferences among officials and a mysterious "order" to halt the raid, no liquor had actually been taken from the ship

An air of mystery prevailed through the entire procedure. This was aug-mented when Philip Elting, collector of the port, coming from a conference with treasury department officials who are here, declared with the seizure in full progress that the status the Baltic had not been definitely

Dispatches from London, dealing with newspaper comment there indicate that the seizure of liquor under British seal aboard the Baltic in New York is obviously a point of interna-tional law ultimately for consideration of the Hague tribunal.

Berengaria Is Next

It was plainly intimated along the waterfront that with the completion of the raid on the Baltic, the Cunarder Berengaria, also in port with liquor for its return trip, would be visited by Early today the raiders boarded the Baltic and after conference with the ship's officers ripped off the seals and prepared to take their "loot" from its wet quarters. Suddenly L. H. Sanders, deputy surveyor, in charge of the raiding party, ordered the men to stop and quit the ship. His order it was learned, was the result of a telephone message received by him. From whom this order came it could not be learned. It was pointed out that Andrew W. Mellon is in New York today ready to sail on the Majestic for Europe. Mr. Mellon, however, would not discuss the liquor situation with newspaper men.

Seizure Under Difficulties

Later, however, and as mysteriously as the previous order, came one order-ing the men back to the ship to complete their job. The ship's cranes were not allowed to be operated by the raiding force, and the task of getting the wet goods from their cache to the deck was a difficult one.

In speaking of the myterious order to stop one official explained that the authoritities had waited through courtesy for Dr. E. K. Sprague, local head of the United States public health service, who had issued a permit for the supplies. When he failed to appear, the raiders resumed their work.

Captain Roberts' protest against the seizure read: I. J. Roberts, master of the British steamship Baltic of Liverpool, protest against the breaking of the British customs seals and the seizure by the United States Customs authorities of the ship's stores of wine and liquor held under seal on board this ship for consumption exclusively outside of the territorial waters of the United States. Paris "Wringing Wet"

The customs authorities here had their task greatly augmented today when the French liner Paris steamed into quarantine with almost enough liquor in her hold to float her.

Preparing to slip up the North River to join the Baltic and Berengaria, the captain of the Paris said he had under seal the following supplies: Ordinary wine, 8494 bottles; crew wine, 51 barrels: Rhine wine, 864 bottles; cognac, 193 bottles; whisky, 76 bottles; gin, 85 bottles; rum, 62 bot-liquor from Canada was not prohibited half bottles; beer, 136 barrels and 266 and there existed no provisions in the bottles; liqueurs, 340 bottles.

BULGARIA DEMANDS OUTLET TO ÆGEAN

SOFIA, June 23—(A)—The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kalloff, has sent a note to the Lausanne Peace Conference calling attention to Bulgaria's declared readiness to observe the Treaty of Neuilly and demanding fulfillment of the article promising Bulgaria an outlet to the Ægean. The note points out that the grant of such an outlet through foreign territory will be an illusory execution of the article. The Bulgarian delegation at Lausanne has been instructed to take a firm stand on the issue.

Benito Mussolini, Premier of Italy, has sent Mr. Kalloff a telegram ex-pressing satisfaction with the pacific declarations of the new government and the hope that the economic life of Bulgaria may be rapidly restored.

Federal Agents Break Seal and New Drastic Orders Dealing With Dry Ship Rules Sent From Treasury Department

> Liner Berengaria to Retain Enthe Supply for "Medicine"

WASHINGTON, June 23 (AP)-New and drastic instructions, designed, it was said, to hasten seizure of beverage liquors aboard the incoming foreign liners, were sent today by McKenzie sary, it was officially stated, by the action of Dr. E. K. Sprague, public health officer in New York, in granting a request of the medical officer of the British liner Berengaria to retain its entire supply of liquors as 'medicinal.'

The permit granted by Dr. Sprague in the case of the Berengaria has been ordered withdrawn by the acting surgeon-general, who received his orders from Mr. Moss. Mr. Moss then notifled customs and prohibition agents that no such "unreasonable" grant of liquors could be allowed by the Treasury.

Mr. Moss telephoned Assistant Collector Stuart at New York, Palmer Canfield, New York federal prohibition director, and Dr. Sprague, quoting the letter of instructions sent recently by Mr. Mellon to the surgeongeneral and explaining that those instructions were subject only to the interpretation placed upon them by the Secretary. After quoting the letter, Mr. Moss added these orders:

Under these instructions it was not intended, and it was expressly so stated intended, and it was expressly so stated by the Secretary to allow any liquors to be brought into the territorial waters of the United States except such as were intended for medicinal purposes, but it was provided and understood that where the laws of a foreign country require a given amount of liquor per capita to be carried for the crew (or, as in the case of Italy, for third class passengers), and such amount was held passengers), and such amount was held by that country at that date to be medicinal liquor and that fact was ex-pressly stated under oath in the appli-cation, then and in that event such amount of liquor would be allowed to the ships of those particular countries; but in all cases where no specific amount is allowed by the laws of the foreign country, the officers of the United States Public Health Service are instructed to make proper inquiry as to the actual medicinal needs and make such allowances as are reasonably necessary for medicinal purposes only.

All liquors found within the territorial waters of the United States and not coming strictly within this purview are subject to seizure and you will im-mediately make seizure thereof, duly list the same and turn over to the pro-hibition officers at the port.

Canada Rejects Request That Ships Carrying Rum to America Be Denied Clearance Papers

Special from Monitor Bureau WASHINGTON, June Canada has declined to accede to the request of Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, asking that the Government withhold clearance papers to vessels carrying cargoes of liquor to ports in the United States. Arthur Balfour Tells Monitor Representative of Details-Loan Believed Feasible

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, June 23-Arthur Balfour, president of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, is in Paris for the purpose of preparing the ground for the eventual constitution of a committee of business men in France to study the reparations problem in a practical manner. A British committee has been appointed, on which Sir Felix Schuster, a prominent banker, Kennet Lee of Manchester, and Sir Josiah Stamp, secretary to Nobel Industries, Ltd., are delegates, Willis Booth, American president of the International Chamber of Commerce, is coming to Paris at an early date to advance this scheme.

The British association is working in full accord with the international chamber. On the French committee, it is hoped, will be a financier, a business man, and a practical eco expert. The French fear that the Germans would be encouraged if a committee was formed at once, but The Christian Science Monitor representative learns from Mr. Balfour that busi-ness men still believe that a loan is

C. T. Wang Says Territory Just as Much Chinese as Manchuria -Railway Prospects Bright

Preliminary Conditions Should Not Be Laid Down, It Is Held, to Renewal of Negotiations

By Special Cable PEKING, June 23—C. T. Wang, director-general of the Sino-Russian negotiations, gave the correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor an interview on Friday on China's attitude toward Mongolia. "China certainly cannot recognize any agreement," he said, "by which its sovereignty over Mongolia is canceled. Mongolia is just as much a part of China as is Manchuria. How much actual administrative control the Chinese Gov-Chinese Mongolians and not by Russians in China."

Mr. Wang said it was desirable to establish the same relations between Mongolia and China as obtain between the territories and the Federal Government in America. He insists that Russia has no more right to par-ticipate in the Sino-Mongolian discussions than to have a voice in the arrangements between the American Federal Government and a former territory like Montana.

Chinese Merchants Suffer

Mr. Wang referred to several Russian statements in which readiness was expressed to cancel all agree-ments by which Russia secured undue special privileges. The Russians specifically mentioned the 1896 secret agreement formed on the basis of the Chinese Eastern Railway agreement as cancelable. Mr. Wang says it means Russia agrees that the railway belongs to China now, not after purchase in 1939 or free return in 1983. China is ready to make through traffic arrangements and to guarantee that the railway zone will not be a source of anti-Russian attacks. Little trouble is expected in settling this question.

Mr. Wang says it is urgent to establish trade relations as Chinese mer-chants are suffering. China is ready o discuss special tariff arrangements for special goods. This point will be easily settled. He believes the negotiations should begin without either Russia or China laying down preliminary conditions.

Russian Sincerity Questioned The re-establishment of full diplomatic relations must be discussed and should not be a preliminary requirement. China has been ready to begin prime factor in the transportation egotiations for two months. Mr. Wang is beginning to question the sincerity of the Russian desire to re-establish

CUTS IN RAIL RATES SEEN BY PRESIDENT IN HIS 'GROUP' PLAN

Mr. Harding, Speaking in Kansas City, Says Government Operation Is Alternative

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 23 (AP)-Consolidation of the railroads of the United States into a small number of ystems is a rational, justifiable step, full of promise toward solution of the transportation problem, President Harding declared here last night in the second prepared address of his western trip.

"If the system consolidations will not afford the solution," he said, "then our failure will enforce a costlier experiment and the one commitment which I hope the United States will forever escape.

The Executive expressed the belief that this one great commitment-Government operation—would be "a colossal blunder, which would destroy initiative, infect us with political corruption, create regional jealousies and npose incalculable cost on the public situation, the President announced that he favored continuance of the Railroad Labor Board "under such relations, because in spite of earlier modifications as seem most likely to make the plan successful." He said sia is now delaying without offering a convincing excuse.

Legislation Forecast

It is, therefore, being seriously proposed that the next step be to further amplify the provisions for consolidation so as to stimulate the consummation. It is my expectation that legislation to this end will be brought before Congress at the next session.

There are some roads-many of the smaller ones in fact—whose continued operation is absolutely vital to many smaller ones in fact—whose conunued operation is absolutely vital to many thousands of people, to considerable towns, to large areas of country, whose revenues simply cannot provide financial facilities through earning, pending a considerable growth in community peopulation, to say nothing of earning population, to say nothing of earning any return whatever on capital invested. Experts Keenly Interested

While it may be difficult for the man in the street" to grasp the significance of this invention or how it will affect his daily life, experts in power engineering, public utilities and chemistry are showing the keenest interest in the progress of Mr. Ford's experiment. It will be recalled that only a few months ago Mr. Ford bought many thousands of acres of coal lands in the Middle West.

The present process of distilling coal-extracting the gas and other byproducts - operates under high temperature. Coal is placed in ovens and neated to around 2400 degrees F. Un-NEW YORK, June 23—Humani-tarians are uniting in a new plan to help the American Indian. At an informal meeting here yesterday after-products are obtained and coal is made to perform many times its old duties. The high temperatures have destroyed many of the gases in the coal which the low temperature will save.

This invention is the explanation of Mr. Ford's repeated announcements in recent months that he would soon show the world how to "burn coal twice," how to reduce the cost of domestic fuel and how to operate industry more economically. Mr. Ford expects to do all these things with his new invention.

While it is not known whether Mr. Ford controls this invention for the entire United States, his connection with the first low temperature ovens to be erected has led to much conjecture as to the tremendous power which would be placed in his hands if he controlled low temperature distillation. He could become the pretonic drick, chairman of the Eastern Assa-ciation on Indian Affairs; Miss Eliza-tillation. He could become the nation's public utility methods. It is claimed for low temperature distillation of coal that it will bring about radical reductions in the cost of illuminating gas, of electrical power, domestic fuel, Association for the Advancement of and of many chemicals.

Source for Motor Fuel

One of the most radical claims made for the new invention is that it will extract from a ton of coal in some cases perhaps as high as 10 gallons ment setting forth the organizations' of motor fuel. This possibility would remove the motorists' anxiety as to "dollar gasoline." It would give the nations a new and almost inexhaustible source of motor fuel supply. Under high temperature distillation no gasoline is recovered. Instead, only 1½ gallons of benzol and small quantities of tolnol and xylol are saved. The new process, it is claimed, will save three gallons of creosote oils against ½ to 1 gallon under the present method. Moreover, the coal used is bituminous, and these results are obtained even from cheapest grades.

Further claims for the new process are that it will take from a ton of coal in some cases as high as six or eight gallons of lubricating oils, though at present creosote is the only heavy oil rescued. Also, that it will extract about 60 pounds of pitch, against 30 to 35 pounds now obtained. Ammonium sulphate (fertilizer) will be produced in about 12 pound quantities per ton it is stated while blee. titles per ton, it is stated, while high temperature produced 28 pounds.

In addition to these by-products, it, is claimed that a ton of coal by the new method will produce 7500 cubic feet of very rich gas. All this is from one ton of coal—and then there will still be left a coke-like substance, 1500 pounds of which Mr. Ford hopes to powder for industrial fue briquette for domestic heating.

Result of Long Experiment While The Christian Science Monitor today presents what is probably the first detailed, authentic announcement of this invention, experiments have been progressing for some years by the inventors. As announced in this newspaper some months ago, the first practical, experimental oven to erected in a cornfield at Huntin W. Va. Much secrecy surrounded the work, but in spite of this, news of the probable success of the experiments leaked out and by-product experts and public utilities executives flocked to Huntington to view the test runs. It was after seeing the test oven work, it came enthusiastic over it and at once obtained some kind of control and permission to erect the first great plants at Walkerville and Detroit. No an-nouncement of further plans are being made although it is reported that a great 10,000-ton a day plant is projected for a point on the Ohio River somewhere near the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Railroad, Mr. Ford's road.

Invention Described

The invention is so simple, it is said, as to amaze the chemists who have spent years trying to solve the problem. The United States Government has directed exhaustive efforts Piron. Belgian by-product expert, is credited with originating the idea on which the new process is founded. He was formerly associated with great by-product interests in Germany, France, Belgium and Russia. Me-chanical details of the invention were handled by Z. V. Carracristi of New York, co-inventor of the mallet locomotive and inventor of the powdered coal burners which are used the gigantic 6000 horsepower botlers at the Ford Motor plant.

Briefly, the invention is this: Coal, crushed, is fed to an endless conveyor made up of cast-iron panlike plates, hinged together. The coal lies on the plates about one-half inch thick. It is thus carried into the oven. On en tering the oven, heated to 1100 grees, the conveyor rests upon a bath of molten lead. The cast-iron, due to specific gravity, floats on the lead. The lead is 80 times a better conductor of heat than air. It also furnishes a support for the conveyor, doing away with working parts. Slowly the conveyor passes through the oven. The comparatively low heat is allowed to pass through the coal-only one-half inch of it-and drives off the gases, saving all of then and not "breaking them down," as in present processes. After going through the oven, the resultant layer of semicoke drops out the other end, to be pulverized or briquetted. The gases are collected, scrubbed, condensed and handled otherwise just as in the present process.

semicoke resultant contains about 11 per cent of volatile matter. Its analysis is similar to anthracite, moderate in ash, and high in heat It is smokeless, burning with a short blue flame of intense heat.

Thus is opened a wide field in modern industry. To illustrate the possi bilities, one need only picture a great by-product plant, handling say 10,000 tons of coal a day. From this is secured 75,000,000 cubic feet of high grade illuminating gas in addition to all other by-products mentioned. Then picture an adjoining electrical power plant and the resultant semicoke fuel being taken from the by-product plant and run under the boilers of the electric plant. Thus is created electrical energy to supply a radius of 200 miles. The gas could be sold at a fraction of the present rates because the by products from coal would yield a big profit and the electricity could be sold very cheaply because the fuel needed to make it would cost virtually nothing. Or a portion of the semicoke could be briquetted for domestic fuel to replace anthracite at a much lower

Blg Transportation Saving

Another feature of the invention is that the new ovens will not require the high grade by-product gas now necessary, but can extract the volatile matters from almost any high volatile coal. For that reason, it is near the coal fields of all coal-producing states and coal used on low freight rates and low mine costs. Under present methods by-product coals. produced mainly in West Virginia and Pennsylvania, must be transported long distances to by-product plants.

It is also said that new fields in chemistry may be opened as the Ford laboratories have not yet traced down all the new oils and combinations being obtained under the new process. Discoveries of great importance may

Mr. Lamie announced to The Christian Science Monitor that the experiments were a complete success and that when the new ovens are in general use, coke making plants can become independent of "smokeless" coal. In the by-product fields this is looked ipon as an extremely important dis-

NEAR EAST PEACE OBSTACLES GROW

British Concessionaires Fail Reach an Agreement-Osmanli Still Arrogant

By CRAWFURD PRICE By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, June 23-The obstacles Near East have been considerably increased by the failure, now announced, of British concessionaires to reach an agreement with the Turkish Government at Angora. It is to be remembered that the Allies, finding a diplomatic arrangement with Ismet Pasha impossible, agreed to refer the whole economic clauses of the draft treaty of Lausanne to direct negotiations between the Kemalist Govern-ment and the parties interested. This initial mistake was quickly fol-lowed up by another when the Turks permitted to transfer the pourparlers from Constantinople In three or four cases, notably the telephone monopoly, the Italian ferry concession, French rights to provide Constantinople with water. lighting and so forth, it has been possible to fix up a truce permitting the companies to carry on, pending further conversations, but on the other hand several representatives of companies have withdrawn in disgust, regarding the prospects of a satisfactory agreement as impossible.

Thus the economic clauses which wrecked the prospects of peace on Feb. 4 were thrown back on the conference. What attitude the allied governments will take cannot be foreanticipated that plants can be erected cast, pending conversations between London, Paris, and Rome, but it is quite probable that this question, coupled with the deadlock over the payment of Ottoman debt coupons, will lead either to suspension of the proceedings or presentation to the something in the nature of an allied ultimatum. Mr. Fisher will lecture on rambler roses at the hall at 3 p. m. both today and tomorrow. Miss Emma R. Case of Hillcrest Gardens, Weston, is showing a collection of larkspur, roses, and hardy perennials, vegetables and fruit.

The chief criticism which emerged during the debate was the objection the white man's.' Mr. Collier said in part:

Oxford and Cambridge to Be Given Financial Help-Cambridge and Women

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, June 23-The House of Commons yesterday passed the second reading of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Bill without a division. The feature of the debate which preceded this action was the desire shown by almost all sections of the House to give the universities the financial help which the bill provides for, without in any way interferring with their self-government. This was most noticeable in reference to the refusal of Cambridge University to admit women to full equality with the men on the lines already adopted by

While the House, with only a few exceptions, expressed disapproval at the action of Cambridge, no desire was manifested to do anything to withhold financial assistance on this account. "Leave 'em alone and they'll come home," as the old nursery rhyme has it, was the general attitude.

MAYOR OF BOSTON AGAIN CRITICIZED

Commission Proposes Method of Awards for Land Taken for Street Widenings

Recommendations by the Boston Finance Commission that in future street widenings, the street commis-sioners hear the demands of owners of land before taking their property and fixing awards, and that thereafter o changes be made, leaving dissatisfied property owners an appeal to the courts, are today before the citizens of Boston for consideration.

The commission made the proposa in a report to Mayor James M. Curley, in which it accused him of increasing ut warrant two awards for land takings in the Stuart Street widening The commission charged that Mayor Curley increased the award of Samuel Lebowich from $124,370 to $160,000 and that of Job E. Gaskin from $90.340 to $125,089, "flagrantly disregarding the city's interests" in so doing.

In the same report the commission exonerated Nathan Matthews, for-merly Mayor of Boston, from charges made against him by Mr. Curley. The commission says the Mayor never has offered evidence to prove any of the allegations he has made in regard to the transactions leading to the land takings in the Stuart Street widening.

that the opposition to giving the present admistration the opportunity to carry out a comprehensive plan of street widening in the city is due, in some degree at least, to the unwarranted statements made your honor since you took office February, 1922, concerning the awards of damages in the Stuart Street widening, while at the same time your honor was approving enormous and unjustified increases in the unpaid awards, such increases aggregating approximately $200,000, and g speculators who had bought practically at face value to receive later from the city increases from 28 per cent to 54 per cent over the awards.

Mayor Curley, in a subsequent message to the commission, said the commission's recommendation "that all owners of property taken, who refuse to accept the awards made by the street commissioners, be left to their remedy in court," "would, if followed in the case of the Stuart Street widening after the precedent established in the Nathan Matthews, Jr., settlement, have represented an increased cost to the city in the matter of the Street awards greatly in excess of the amounts expended. The thers. Jr., case established, as your commission is fully aware, a standard of values nearly 100 per cent in excess of assessment, and made it absolutely impossible to permit any settlement on a lower basis."

It was believed that in the vast majority of cases this procedure would prevent lockouts and strikes; and, in view of the enormous loss to the carriers, to their employees, and to the public resulting from strikes, I profoundly regret that it should not have been possible to give the plan a fair trial. If human wisdom shall ever be capable of setting up such a tribunal as that, and of inspiring both sides of the controversy with complete confidence in it, we will have traveled a long way toward industrial peace.

Backs Inland Waterways

Backs Inland Waterways Personally, I have confidence that the thing is possible. I believe so firmly in the underlying common sense of both organized industry and organ-ized labor, and in the fairness toward both on the part of the great public on which both of them are finally dependent, that I believe at last it will be possible to arrive at settlement of industrial disputes in public services by such a method.

There is another highly important phase of the transportation problem very much worth our attention. I believe the use of our inland waterways offers the one sure way to reduced carrying charges on basic materials, heavy cargoes, and farm products.

The Federal Government has expended approximately $1,180,610,000 on river and harbor improvement. The millions expended on inland waterways, on rivers and canals, have brought small returns because we have put them to no practical use. We have failed in co-ordinating service and have allowed the railroads to discourage every worth-while development.

I believe we should encourage our water service, we should see to an equitable highsion of rates, and exact rate reductions whenever practicable to operate successfully under rate reductions.

I wish the railway leadership of the country could see the need of this employment of our water routes as an essential factor in perfected transportation, and join in aiding the feasible plan of co-ordinating service and cheapening charges, not alone as a means of popularized and efficient public service, but as a means of ending the peril of their own fortunes.

Mason Padelford, presi- waters dent of the Medical Liberty League, Inc., in an open letter to Dr. George E. In his letter, which is in answer to the attitude of the foundation on vac-nished to the press.

Paraphrased in blunt terms, but with no distortion of meaning, your state-ment would read about as follows:

Sincere, but Mistaken

From your point of view, I can understand that it must be extremely tantalizing to you to see, in your mind's eye, 100,000,000 heedless, care-free, happy-go-lucky people like the inhabitants of the United States, neglecting vaccination, when, if you only had the power, you might impose upon them the Jennerian scar which you no doubt consider a priceless boon.

The sincerity of those who have the idea that their conventional belief in vaccination and inoculation should be law to the rest of the people, cannot be questioned, any more than the sincerity of the leaders of the Holy Inquisition can be questioned. To be sincere in purpose, but mistaken in policy, is not uncommon.

You accuse anti-vaccination societies of misrepresentation. Misrepresentation in the form of exaggeration, is a very human weakness, from which few controversialists are exempt. Even you fall into this error unintentionally no doubt. In your report of the

The author discussed the question of sovereign rights in mandated territories, and opinions were cited on this subject. With respect to sovereignty, the conclusion of the thesis is as follows: Sovereignty over the mandated territories resides in the principal allied and associated powers. In the case of the B and C mandates, the sovereignty is retained unsailles, until the territories are "able to stand alone." The situation is ex-plained further: Sovereignty over cer-tain territories has been transferred by treaty to the principal allied and associated powers. These powers have conveyed on certain states the power to govern those territories, but under restriction. The states must govern according to the conditions laid down by the principal allied and associated powers in Article 22 of the Treaty of Versailles, and also according to rules, aimed to carry out in detail the provisions of Article 22, which the mandatory may make for itself, but subject to the approval of the League of Nations, which in turn receives its authority from the principal allied and associated powers. Some of the principal criticisms of the mandatory system are recorded, most of which are lacking in the comprehension of the intent of the system. Instances are given which show tendency to extend the ideas of the system to other areas of backward and dependent peoples.

Crowds Buy at the Coward Store

Almost every hour of every day finds a crowd of folks buying shoes at the Coward Store. They come from near and far-many of the out-of-towners paying an annual visit, buying several pairs of Coward Shoes for different members of the family.

Our aggregate sales mount into the millions yearly permitting us to operate on a narrow profit margin. And our unassuming location away from the high rent centers keeps down overhead. Both of which directly benefit Coward wearers for we give values they can't excel elsewhere.

"CABINET" OF THREE URGED FOR ALASKA

President's Party to Study Plan for Subsecretaries of Commerce, Interior, Agriculture

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE WASHINGTON, June 22-President Harding's expedition to Alaska has two main objectives:

1. To evolve order out of the apparent chaos now prevailing in its administrative system. 2. To "sell" Alaska to the American people in the sense of advertising the Territory's immense value to the Nation.

The President realizes that Alaska cannot begin to realize its latent possibilities until its governmental sys-tem has been reconstructed. To that end Mr. Harding is taking with him the three members of the Cabinet, in whose departments the Territory's affairs now mainly are centered. These are Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce; Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, and Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture

Bygone congresses have had laid before them a plan which now may be revived. It involves the appointment of three assistant secretaries of the executive departments above men-tioned, who shall devote their entire time to Alaskan business. They would reside in Alaska for the major would reside in Alaska for the major portion of the year, and, while there, serve as a sort of cabinet for the Governor of the Territory. Such months as they were not at Juneau, the capital, they would function in Washington at the departments of which they were subchiefs. Thus, there would be maintained a direct, centralized supervision of Alaskan centralized supervision of Alaskan affairs, both in the Territory and in the United States, such as there has never been before.

Reorganization Held Urgent

This arrangement has not been decided upon. Like many others, it is merely a proposal. Whether it is feasible, or whether it is the best method that can be adopted, will not be determined until the President and the Cabinet officers in question have looked over Alaska with their own eyes. There is, at the outset of their journey of investigation, only one certainty: That is, that the need for sweeping reorganization is urgent, and that something to take the place of the present disorganization and overorganization no longer can be post-

One feature of Alaska that has not One feature of Alaska that has not been stressed, but into which the President's party is going to look carefully, is the Territory's future as a source of food supply for the United States. Some authorities consider it well within the range of possibilities that reindeer can be raised in Alaska on a scale sufficient to develop a great packing industry there and supply large sections of the United States with meat.

Instead of the 250,000 reindeer now maintained under federal supervision, there seems no sound reason why there shouldn't be 5,000,000, with corresponding increase in the meat supply derived from them. The salmon industry of Alaska is also capable of wide expansion. Already $50,000,000 is invested in salmon canneries. There is a new system of control necessary in the salmon trade, to prevent "over-fishing." The salmon fisheries at present not only are not conducted economically or scientifi-"over-fishing." The salmon cally, but actually are being destroyed

Apart from foodstuffs, possibly the greatest potential asset of Alaska, from the standpoint of economic development, is the pulp industry. Growth of that trade hitherto has been restricted by the "stumpage" policy that has been pursued by the United States Government. The result has been that the industry is mainly in the hands of Americans operating under more favorable conditions on the Canadian side of the Alaskan border, which is dotted with large pulp mills. With a broader-guage forestry policy in Alaska, au-thorities are confident that American capital now invested in Canadian pulp mills promptly will be invested in Alaska.

The vast territory obtained from Russia in 1867 for a mere song has never recovered fully from the "black eye" it received from the Ballinger-Pinchot squabble during the Taft Administration in 1909. Ever since that bitter battle of conservation politics, the banks and moneyed interests of the United States have labored under belief that Uncle Sam's hand in Alaska is raised against capital. It is the Harding Administration's task, and its immediate intention, to remove that misapprehension while fully conthat misapprehension while fully con-serving the Nation's interest. There was a recrudesdence of enthusiasm for Alaska during Franklin K. Lane's Sec-retaryship of the Interior, but the World War came along, diverted popular interest in the Territory, lured thousands of its few white men away to the battlefields, and matters went from bad to worse.

When Scott C. Bone, Governor of Alaska, was in Washington in 1922, he laid the foundations for the visit President Harding has now embarked upon. Mr. Bone is a super-enthusiast on the Territory's possibilities. upon. Mr. Bone is a super-enthusiast on the Territory's possibilities, pro-vided it can be rescued from bureau-cratic clutches. "Alaska's troubles are three," Mr. Bone said to this writer in Washington a year ago, "and the seat of them is right here, not up there. They are the ignorance and the indifference of the American people toward their richest territorial people toward their richest territorial possession; the tangled and twisted system under which it is governed; and the shyness of capital. There are other reasons why Alaska has not prospered, but these are the main ones. Deal with them, and the territorial territorial system. tory will have a new birth."

YALE OARSMANSHIP PROVES · FAR SUPERIOR TO HARVARD'S

Elis Win Varsity, Junior Varsity and Freshman Races by Wide Margins in Big Regatta

Yale and the humiliation of Harvard together represent the aftermath of the Harvard-Yale regatta, which was contested on the Thames River here terday was a good crew and the men yesterday. It was a thoroughly clean sweep for Yale, an impressive triumph in every one of the three major races freshman, junior varsity, and varsity Today Yale finds itself well up toward the pinnacle of American college rowing, and many are willing to express the belief that could the Elis start against the field at Poughkeepsie next week they would sweep aside all doubt as to their complete supremacy. This is rather a presumptuous statement, for the strength of the United States Naval Academy and University of Washington eights have never been tested by Yale, and those two great rowing powers must always be conjured with in determining champions. Be that as it may, there were plenty of voices shouting "American champions! American champions!' around the gathering places here last night, and the cry was echoed in New Haven and carried into every recess where there was a Yale man today. Whether or not Yale can claim such a title, it is noteworthy, at least, that Yale has performed a notable and exceedingly brilliant feat in climbing from almost the very bottom to wel up toward the top of the rowing ladder, all in the space of one year.

One person gets practically all of the credit for the spectacular revolution in Yale rowing. That man is Edward O. Leader, whom Yale obtained from the University of Washington last fall, after he had made a fine record on the Pacific coast, par ticularly in finishing a good second to the great Navy crew in the Pough keepsie regatta last year. Leade stepped right into the problem at New Haven, handled it masterfully, and out champion crews almost solely by his own genius. He is certainly one of the great coaches of the It is unfair to hand a man any great laurels until he has set down a cord over a period of years, such as in the cases of men like C. E. Courtney and J. A. Ten Eyck; but Leader has already started with such a brilperformance that he is practically assured of very high ranking among that select circle of remarkable rowing mentors. Hundreds of coaches come and go, and only once in a decade or more does one come for-ward who can claim lasting fame. If such a one has been produced in this decade, he is certainly none other than Leader. Richard Glendon, who brought the Navy so prominently to the fore, may be said to belong to an older generation, already "made, Quite in contrast to the marvelous performance with Yale is the disma crash-really just "another crash"-at Harvard. F. J. Muller of Phila delphia has had virtually the same trial at Cambridge as Leader has had at New Haven; but Muller did not prove himself. It is perhaps unfair to compare him with the great Leader; but it remains a fact that Muller failed seriously challenge the Blue. whole year at Harvard is another failure, as it has been for so many years now that the rowing people at Cambridge might well be expected to ruffle up and demand a complete revolution and some rational installations.

The system in vogue at Cambridge will never produce winning crews. There were five or six coaches this past year all working on different branches, every one with his own stroke. Muller had no co-operation and enjoyed little harmony. He took a group of men who had learned to row under three or four different sys tems and tried to install one uniform system in them. He really didn't get down to anything definite until he got to Red Top, and then it was too late to attain a speed to match Yale. Even if Muller had won, he would have been faced next fall with the necessity of taking over the freshman oarsmen and teaching them his stroke all over again, after they had learned one system under H. H. Haines. Such a system could never hope to accomplish anything. Leader knew what he wanted when he heard the call of Yale and he demanded that he be tsar and the last authority. He swept the old régime entirely out at New Haven and insisted upon one style of rowing all the way through.

But there is another item which very, very few of the thousands who witnessed the parades on the Thames yesterday were aware of. That is the matter of training and condition. Leader is of the "slave-driving" school, and when his men were called upon to row a tough race yesterday, they were in perfect condition to do it. Proper attention to the training table has never been given in recent years at Harvard, and even Muller may be said to have slipped up in this respect.

Harvard must now install a vigorous, active, rational rowing system or the Crimson will continue to lose as in the past. Harvard must forget personalities, clean out the cobwebs, and perhaps even get rid of some of the surplus "cooks." Rowing is the biggest sport in Harvard University, in point of number of men participating; but it is probably the most consistently unsuccessful sport there also. Harvard rightly still believes that the greatest value in rowing lies in the individual pleasures which hundreds of students gain from it; but there are a great many who would like to see that attractive fea-ture combined with an occasional victory. Harvard has not won a rowing race for so long that the Crimson hardly remembers the flavor of victory. Any coach who can come to T displayed commendable grit. They came out to the line facing the recol-lection of defeats which their colleagues had met with in the morning races. They had all along been looked upon as outclassed, until a week or so before the race, when they seemed to take on new vigor and appeared for a time to have an even chance. But when Harvard was so completely crushed in the freshman and junior varsity races, the inevitable was distulized. And so it was that the Crimson varsity went out to the line. The Crimson really got the jump on Yale at the start, and there was new enthusiasm in the Harvard supporters on the observation train. Harvard swept out into a pretty looking stroke at 37 beats to the minute, while Yale rowed her now famous short and powefful stroke at a slightly lower beat. There was very little to choose beween the two crews over the first half mile, but immediately after these first flags were passed, the nose of the Blue shell began to creep out into the lead. At the three-quarter mile the Blue shell began to creep out into the lead. At the three-quarter mile mark Yale had nearly a half length lead, and at the mile had scarcely ineased this, so that the crowd still looked for the real race that they had been hoping for but which in the morning seemed so hopeless. Then Yale began again. In the next quar-ter of a mile the Elis opened up their lead to a full length, and held this to the mile and a half point. Here Yale was rowing a 32 and Harvard a 33. There was little change from here on to the two-mile mark, half way, where, however, Yale had begun to open up water, dropping still lower, to a 31 stroke, while Harvard came down

It may be said that the real race was in the first two miles, for after that Harvard cracked. It may be recalled that the warning was given that Harvard rowed a short, vicious stroke; that vicious strokes required the expenditure of great energy; and this stroke yesterday took all Harvard had at the two-mile mark. At the two and one-half point Yale had opened up a full length of open water, and from here on in to the finish kept adding to it until, when the crews went under the New London bridge marking the finish, Yale was a good four lengths of open water to the good. Yale was fresh and sprightly at the finish, while Harvard was completely rowed out. Yale kept up her vigorous, clean stroke all the way down, while Harvard, in spite of a fine start and much commendable rowing ragged in the last mile or so, and looked rather poor going over the finish. The Harvard men rowed a game race and went down with colors flying. They thoroughly surprised the crowd in the first two miles, especially the first mile, and lost only because they were up against one of the greatest crews in the country. The usual post regatta festivities followed last night, chief among which was the election of captains by the letter men. Yale chose J. S. Rockefeller '24 of Greenwich, Conn., son of William Rockefeller and nephew of John D. Rockefeller. He prepared at Taft School, and has rowed on the Yale varsity for two years. He is a big man, standing 6ft. high and weigh-ing 180 pounds. Harvard elected B. McK. Henry '24 of Rosemont, Pa., also a two-year veteran, who prepared at St. George's, stands 6ft. 2in. in height, and weighs normally around 185

troublesome weather kept the young golfers from establishing new records during the four days of play. One un-paralleled feat was, however, accom-plished when Paul Swanson '23, University of Minnesota captain, won 10 consecutive holes from his opponent, in 38 strokes, and ended the match eight holes to go. Besides Swanson, other good players to surrender ulti-mately to their superiors were T. H. Smith '24, captain of the University of Michigan team, and J. P. Hum-phreys '24, national left-handed champion, and member of the star Illinois team. This team looks like the Conleader for some time to come, as Rolfe today announced that he has decided to remain another year at the coclede to remain another, year at the college, as will Humphreys, as well.

Rolfe, after fighting valiantly for three years at "Big Ten" golf, and being eliminated last year from the championship only after he had reached the finals, yesterday attained the height of his collegiate athletic work. In the face of unfavorable glory. In the face of unfavorable weather conditions he turned in one of the lowest cards of the tournament in the morning round, a 77, his oppo-nent close behind with a 78, though 2 down in strokes, both were placing perfect iron shots to the greens and were driving well, Novotny's tremendous driving power frequently getting him in trouble on the dog-leg holes where he got much distance but landed in the rough. Putting of both was fair, being marked by the same inconsistency as that of everybody in the tournament, on account of the unusual greens.

It remained for Rolfe, however, to deliver one of the greatest outbursts of brilliant putting ever seen by those who watched the match.

This was at the start of the second 18 after lunch with Rolfe 2 up. Beginning with the first hole, he sank a 20-foot putt, after apparently having lost the hole, with Novotny on in two after a spectacular 150 iron shot from the rough. Then on the second hole, another 400-yard affair, with both on the green with their seconds. Rolfe, shooting as though at a six-foot target, sent his ball like an arrow over the ocean-wave surface of the green for a 40-foot drop, and a birdie But the height of his audacity, which almost had Novotny ready to resign the match to his friend, occurred on the fifth hole, where an ingenious designer made the large green look like a great cheese with a hole chewed through the middle of it by a deep bunker. Novotny approached this hazardous difficulty with a perfect shot, while Rolfe found the trap and took 2 to get up on the green again, far from the cup. Novotny appeared to cinch the hole with his putt, which he executed with a mashie over the depression to within a few feet of the hole, but Rolfe calmly dropped his from 30 feet for a half. These three long putts of Rolfe's added to his morning advantage made him 5 up, a lead which he needed to win as Novotny twice reduced it only to have it mount again by the fifteenth hole. Rolfe was steadily losing the power and direction of his drives and was guilty on the sixth, tenth and fourteenth holes of some putting ST. LOUIS' FIFTH STRAIGHT LOSS reckoning solely on known form, one is tempted very much to venture a prophecy as to the ultimate winners of the star events of the meeting—the men's and women's singles. Mile. That implies, fairly definitely, that she will once prolonged to almost three weeks, and F. Fournier, Brooklyn, 338; J. more be the lady champion. In 1921, her skill at Wimbledon showed no decrease, and last year she played better than ever she had done before at the meeting. The one person named as capable of encompassing her defeat was Mrs F. I. Mallory of the United States who had won by default an unfortunate match on the only occasion that Mile. Or else, Mrs. Mal locomparable play. Or else, Mrs. Mallory plays vastly better in America than she has yet managed to do in England. The incident referred to, coupled with the enterprise of the newspaper world, made the Lenglen-Mallory match at Wimbledon in 1922 the most eagerly awaited and widely discussed match between women eve

Her generalship was superb her stroke execution faultless, and her overwhelming victory a true reflection of her superiority. Mrs. Mallory, whose great ability and unassuming manner have made her a most popular figure on English courts, was outclassed. It may happen that Mrs. Mallory will encounter her rival again this year. In such an eventuality, her success would be a great surprise to the majority of English critics. Not that it would be a far greater surprise than the success of Miss Kathleen McKane, Miss Elizabeth Ryan, or Mrs. A. E. Beamish. Speaking simply from past performances, one would con-sider Miss McKane most likely to succeed. In the mixed doubles, Mile. Lenglen will partner the slashing Belgian left-hander, Jean Washer. That being so, and her team-mate in the women's doubles being Miss Ryan, a triple victory for the French star seems probable.

There appears no very cogent rea-son why the men's singles should not fall to W. M. Johnston, United States. In the absence of his only compeer, W. T. Tilden 2d, G. L. Our view of the situation is that liquidation during the past three months has been most severe and thorough, and that it has been sufficiently large to correct an over-bought and overexpanded speculative position, and that around this level, even in the oils, one will not go far wrong in buying good seasoned securities on such breaks as we had last Wednesday.

NEW YORK CURB

NEW YORK, June 23—Trading on the Curb exchange was unsettled during the first half of the week by the failure of two stock exchange firms and the general pressure that came in all security markets.

About the widest break was in Checker Cab, which fell from 61 to 24, but rallied 10 points before the week ended. Midvale Company of Delaware dropped to the new low record of 11% and Peerless Motor showed a loss of 10 points. Stutz Motor Yielded 3½ points. Congoleum, under small sales, ranged from 202 to 207. Glen Alden Coal yielded from 68 to 65 and a number of other stocks lost one to more than four points.

Standard Oll issues also suffered severe breaks. Prairie Oll declined 8 points to 182, but later rose to 200. Standard Oil of Indiana, after falling 2% to the new low record of 54, also made a good recovery. South Penn was exceptionally strong, while other oil stocks were weak.

Mining stocks suffered to a moderate extent, high-priced issues like Hollinger having been in supply but becoming firm at the end of the week, when the Cobalt issues were influenced by reports of heavy yielding of silver metal in fields in the Cobalt district operated by Continental Mines.

Boston Department Stores Report Increased Sales in May

Retail trade in New England improved during May.

According to reports received by the Federal Bank of Boston from leading Boston department stores. there was an increase of six per cent in net sales compared with May, 1922, while department store sales in other New England cities were 12 per cent larger than a year ago.

The volume of trade in the women's apparel shops of Boston con-tinued to show the effects of the late season and adverse weather condi-tions. These shops have not received a proportionate share of this spring's business, and as a result, their total sales since the first of the year have shown scarcely any increase over the Reports are also received by the Federal Reserve Bank from the most important departments of the Boston stores. The total sales of these reporting departments represent approximately 50 per cent of the total volume of sales.

The greatest improvement during

The greatest improvement during May as compared with a year ago was noticed in the apparel sections, both men's and women's clothing showing a larger relative volume of business than has been the rule in previous months of 1923.

Increased sales of women's, misses' and girls' footwear reflect an increased demand, a portion of which may be attributed to style changes introducing many lines of novelty footwear.

WEEK'S REVIEW OF CHIEF EVENTS IN BRITISH FINANCE

Unsettlement in General World Affairs Reflected in Desultory Stock Market

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, June 23—The stock ex-change here has been in the doldrums this week, and the falling off in business that marked the previous fort-night has been accentuated. Investsecurities and speculative shares alike have had declines in price levels. Even the Austrian loan, which speculators expected to reach a preium of 10 per cent, has fallen away to a 5 per cent premium. The extremely unsatisfactory condition of continental affairs —the tale told by the violent exchange fluctuations-adverse news from New York, count, all were factors in the present

Another contributing cause is held to be the fact that money is becoming tighter as the market begins, at last, to feel the effects of an increase in American borrowing in Lombard

The weekly Bank of England return shows a further decline in "other" deposits. There has been no lack of interest and support for new capital issues, however. East Indies £6,000,000 5 per cent loan at 92 was immediately oversubscribed, as was the £2,400,000 issue by the textile firm of Salts.

some time ago. Freight Traffic Declines

The index figure of freights for May just available shows a decline last month of nearly 1½ points, the time charter rate index being the lowest yet recorded at 23.5 compared with 26.9 last year.

The decline in freights coupled with an increase in the price of bunker coal, more than offset any advantag obtained through the recent wage r ductions. Business this year on th whole has been unremunerative

In the kindred industry of shipbuilding, the outlook is aggravated by a continuance of the boilermakers dispute, and, although only about 10,-.000 men are directly concerned, losses o firms through work held up and contracts missed, are very heavy. There have been £750,000 forfeited by the men in wages. Although at the moment there is a lull in the campaign for reducing railroad freight rates, a new weapon is added to the army of champions of lower rates by the saving of £2,000,000 a year accruing to the rail companies through the reduction in the wages bill, following pay adjustment on the decline in living costs. The extreme urgency of reductions is emphasized in a report of the committee on agricultural produce issued yesterday which declares that "unless the fruit and vegetable industry in many districts is to perish, rail rates cannot be maintained even at 50 per cent above the 1914 level."

Coal prices have steadied again and the export demand is better, but the outlook for industry is complicated by labor uncertainty following Thursday's rejection by the House of Commons of the wage bill introduced by miners. which, it is estimated, would have cost an additional £12,500,000 a year and increased the price of fuel to the public by 3s. to 4s. 8d. a ton.

LOS ANGELES, June 22-Harbon commerce in the first week of June established a new high record. Oil xports rank first, 46 tankers of approximately 4,500,000 barrels capacity eing loaded at Los Angeles-Long Beach harbor, an average of 650,000 close second, with 42 arrivals and caroes, totaling 52,025,000 feet.

The importance of increased oil exports was reflected by Los Angeles ecently at the municipal port of San edro. Orange County appropriated $1,000,000, in addition to $500,000 already subscribed, for deepening and dredging the harbor at Newport Beach to permit loading seagoing tankers

Edward M. Tutwiler

AJ. EDWARD MAGRUDER TUTWILER is one of the captains of the Coal, iron and manufacturing industries of the Birmingham, Ala., district and as a pioneer did much to build up the city as the industrial center of the south. Major Tutwiler had already attained a place of eminance in the profession of engineering when he went to Birmingham about 35 years ago. That was at the time of the Birmingham boom, when the fame of the city that sprang up in a cotton field over night was being noised around the world.

Major Tutwiler is a native of Virginia. He was a student at the Virginia Military Institute in 1864 when the call came to check the Federal advance up the Valley of Virginia. He volunteered with others of his school, and served at the front until the evacuation of Richmond.

With the close of hostilities he resumed his collegiate career, giving especial attention to engineering, and was graduated in 1867. The following two years he earned his living as a teacher. He then entered upon his profession as a rodman in the engineering corps of the Lehigh Valley & Susquehanna Railroad. He was an indefatigable worker and made rapid advance in his profession during the next 10 or 12 years.

He served in various capacities, from locating engineer to chief engineer, in connection with the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Cincinnati Southern, the Miami Valley, the Richmond & Allegheny, and finally with the Georgia Pacific Railway. Mr. Tutwiler had the distinction of locating the eastern end of the Chesapeake & Ohio from Richmond to Newport News during the early seventies. In 1879 he served one year as assistant engineer of the City of Cincinnati.

It was his connection with the Georgia Pacific that eventually led to his coming to Alabama in 1881. Two years later he became superintendent of the Sloss Company's coal mines at Coalburg, Brookside and Blossburg. In 1889 he organized the Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Company, which became one of the greatest institutions of its kind.

He was one of the pioneers in developing the modern enlightened policy governing the relations between the officers and stockholders and the employees of a great corporation. Many years ago Mr. Tutwiler became convinced that a happy, contented employee was the only sure foundation for establishing a permanent value in the relationships existing between capital and labor.

Mr. Tutwiler also found time to aid in other constructive enterprises affecting Birmingham. He served on the directorate of the First National Bank, the Birmingham Underwriters, the Alabama Grocery Company, and built the Tutwiler Hotel and the Ridgely Apartments, two modern buildings that would do credit to a city many times the population of

He is a member of the Church of the Advent and of various clubs and civic organizations. In 1906 Mr. Tutwiler retired from active business and now devotes his attention to his private interests.

To the Public

We have been notified that a strike of telephone operators has been called for Tuesday, June 26, at 7 A. M.

We believe this ultimatum represents the sentiment of only a small minority of our operating force.

We believe the great majority of our operators will refuse to obey this strike order, and remain at their switchboards to give service to you.

We previously declined to grant the demands for wage increases and shorter hours on which this strike is based, because we regarded them as unreasonable and unwarranted. We explained to every operator the reasons for our decision and we believe the great majority accept it as reasonable and just.

We believe also that our decision is in the public interest, and that for the operators who have assured us they will remain at their switchboards and continue to give service, we may properly ask your encouragement and support.

STINNES SAID TO BE GRASPING FOR GERMAN RAILWAYS

Inquiry Into Slump in Mark Displays Lines' Dependence on His Financial Support

By Special Cable BERLIN, June 23-Some intimation of the extent of the Stinnes purchases of foreign bills, with every purchase tending to force the quotations for the Depositors mark lower, appeared yesterday in the public session of the Reichstag spe-cial committee investigating the slump of the mark since April. Perhaps more important than this however, was the evidence which showed the close relations Stinnes has with the state-owned railroads, which roads, report persists. Stinnes is reaching out to grasp and bring within the fold of his numerous organizations. These railroads are plums upon which many men are casting covetous eyes.

Stinnes Buying Expands

Stinnes did not answer personally the summons to appear before the committee. Instead, he sent his son Hugo Jr., business manager and financial expert. Briefly, Stinnes testified that from Jan. 1 to May 31 the Stinnes' interests required £2,220,000 foreign bills to carry on their affairs, part of which was purchased in the open market. Since then, however, his requirements of foreign bills have vastly increased, until now he must have a minimum of £50,000 a day, or an increase of about 350 per cent over the requirements of the January to May period.

A very large part, if not all, of these requirements for foreign bills comes from the necessity to replenish stocks of raw material, which are exhausted, and for the purchase of fuel abroad to take the place of Ruhr coal which is cut off by the occupying powers.

An echo of the French occupation of the Ruhr and the embargo on coal shipments to unoccupied Germany was also heard when the Stinnes representatives testified that credit for the operation of German railroads, since the Ruhr occupation, belonged chiefly to Stinnes, since it was through his efforts that the railroads supplied

It was declared that the railroads frequently are delinquent in the payment of foreign bills, and on certain occasions are indebted to Stinnes to the amount of £300,000. Testimony tended to show that Stinnes is the chief reliance of the German Government for fuel supply, both railways and navy.

Not Manipulation

No evidence was adduced to show there has been any speculation or manipulation which in informed quarters is held as chiefly responsible for the tremendous break in quotations of the mark since last April, or for the last week's slump and partial ecovery

After having reached a new low level of 157,000 to the dollar, marks again responded to purchases of foreign bills by the Reichsbank and losed yesterday evening at 135,660. Unofficial reports in informed quarters say that another attempt is to be made to stabilize the mark around

Undue Apprehension Most Largely Responsible for Slump in Market

NEW YORK, June 23 (Special) - When the trend of stocks this week was decidedly downward, undoubtedly the selling which caused it was due far more to what was going on in Wall Street than to any condition or conditions outside of it. The latter have not changed materially for

In some lines of business activity a further recession is reported, while in others operations are said to be on a somewhat larger scale than when the predictions of a general business depression were most frequently heard. It is ordinarily assumed that when things are not going well in Wall Street people beyond its limits who are always more or less interested in its activities become more apprehensive than the people who are on the spot, more experienced and with better facilities to learn the facts. When the stock market was at the worst this week, apparently the apprehension was greater within a stone's throw of the stock exchange than anywhere else. Sentiment had been becoming more depressed by the successive announcements of failures. That of a large international banking house of many years' standing a week ago today naturally had more effect in this direction than the failures of the considerable number of consolidated and curb exchange firms that had gone

Unreasoning Apprehension

With the big failure last Saturday came rumors that other important institutions were seriously embarrassed and likely to be compelled to give up at most any moment. In this atmosphere of tension the stock maropened, and it was perfectly natural that there should have been heavy liquidation and aggressive short selfing. Quite likely the latter induce the In the judgment of conservative bankers an unreasoning fear dereloped, which resulted in wholly unustified selling, notwithstanding the failure of a second prominent inter-national banking firm.

Now that the tension is less in the financial district, with the recovery in stocks that has taken place, it is well worth giving attention to important features of the general situation that always carry weight in the making of market commitments, when people are able to think and act normally.

While it was reported that umers of copper metal were holding off somewhat in the placing of orders. because of the disturbed conditions in Wall Street, it is probable that, as a whole, business has not shrunk perceptibly on account of that develop-Production in the steel mills and in those of various other industries was reduced temporarily this week by the extreme heat. Much attention was given by thoughtful observers to the statements of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon regarding business and financial conditions throughout the country, on the eve of his departure for Europe. It would be well for those who have been predicting dire disaster for general business and for Wall Street to realize that he would not be going away on a rather extended trip if he did not know that the situation is sound, as he outlined it as being. The same interests would do well also to realize that President Harding and all the other members of his Cabinet save one would not be leaving Washington for weeks, if they did not know that there is no good reason for grave

Money Conditions Easy

The trend of the money market and the fact that subscriptions to the offering of $150,000,000 treasury certificates of indebtedness totaled $342,462,000 clearly show the ease of the monetary position in the United States and the amount of money free for investment. The fact that the Government did not need more than $189,833,500 of the proceeds of this offering, together with predictions of a $200,000,000 surplus for the fiscal year ending a week hence, shows the extent to which the financial position of the Government

That some of the leading industrial corporations are not appre-hensive over the future was proved by the resumption of dividends where they had not been paid for some time, and by increases of existing rates in The declaration of a quarterly dividend of 1 per cent by both the Crucible Steel Company and the New York Air Brake Company on their common stock and an extra of $1.50 a share by the Corn Products Refining Company might be mentioned as illustrations. The harmonizing of the highly conflicting interests in the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad so that it was possible to bring out a reorganization plan to which they unanimously agreed must be regarded as a constructive factor also.

President Harding's address in Kansas City on transportation problems should have a reassuring effect in railroad and financial circles and upon the investors in railroad securities.

LIQUIDATION IN WHEAT, RYE AND OATS IS HEAVY

Corn Market Withstands Attacks of Bears and Makes Good Gains

Special from Monitor Bureau CHICAGO, Ill., June 23-Wheat, rye and oats this week have been under heavy pressure of liquidation, while the corn market has withstood the attacks of the bears, and has scored substantial gains, carrying prices up to new high levels for the crop year. September wheat made new low records for the season, while the July nearly reached the low of last fall. Midweek declines carried all markets downward, with corn resisting the most, and making the quickest re-

Selling was induced by the weakness in stocks, the more bearish crop reports due to good rains in the northwest, and to excellent harvest conditions in the winter wheat belt Bearish estimates of wheat stocks given publicity by delegates to the tive market, as well as the attack on grain exchanges, launched at the conerence by Senator Capper of Kansas. Various Influences

Prices at the low point reflected the combined result of these various feaures. The decline brought in much more export buying demand. Heavy stop-loss selling apparently marked the end of a long-drawn-out period of liquidation with the final pressure due more to short selling than anything else. Investment buying appeared in grain, cotton, and stocks hension in regard to the spring wheat conditions, the annual crop scare period in reference to spring wheat close at hand, and undoubtedly this is the incentive for short covering by the professional element.

Black rust, high temperatures and blight with any incidental crop scare factors will probably be fully exploited in the next few weeks. At the moment, however, the spring wheat prospects are excellent, and the report on Canadian crops issued by the Bank Montreal is unusually optimistic as to agricultural condiitons, in the

Better Export Demand

Some buying of wheat has been stimulated by the cable advices stating that the harvest in western Europe probably will be two weeks late on account of cold and wet weather. This probably explains the better export demand for near-by shipment which has resulted in disposing of some of the old crop wheat at Chicago. Country selling of new crop wheat so far is of limited proportions, and not up to expectations. However, harvest is well under way as far north as southern Kansas, and, judging from present reports, the movement of wheat will be normally early, barring bad weather.

Summer Fancies

-have found expression in dainty wisps of crisp organdy and fine lace, fashioned into collars, cuffs and vestees for Milady's summer togs. Some are of linen, too. Many are white, many others saucily colored. All are chic.

Kansas state officials estimate the wheat crop at 94,000,000 bushels. The corn bulls apparently have taken advantage of the weakness in other grains to get a tighter hold on this market. There has been support at all times, and the moderate increase in country offerings with slightly lower cash corn premiums, has not shaken the confidence of holders, who are firmly of the opinion that a genuine shortage exists in this cereal. For this reason, the excellent new crop prospects are being ignored, and are re flected in a discount of 12 cents for the December under September.

Receipts show only a moderate increase, and receivers say there is no heavy country movement in sight. Oats declined and advanced mainly in sympathy with other grains, while liquidation carried rye prices down to the lowest levels in several years Compared with a week ago wheat prices finished yesterday 41/4 @6 cents lower; corn 1/4 @21/2 cents higher; oats, 1/4 @1/4 cents off and rye 41/4 @57/6 cents lower.

FAVORABLE TRADE SIGNS BALANCE THE DRAWBACKS

New York, June 23-Bradstreet's Review of Domestic Trade says: "A very fair measure of improvement in crops and a smaller gain in national wheat conference also put ment in crops and a smaller gain in additional pressure on the specula- retail buying and in reorder trade with jobbers of summer goods, followed clearing skies in the south and west while needed rains have made for a better crop outlook in the north-

"These natural developments in favorable direction for the week are to be considered over against some at least, temporarily, disturbing features in the shape of failures of two old financial houses, which unsettled the stock, cotton, and other speculative United States sailed today on the markets; rather heavy declines in wheat prices preceding and following a conference at which means for obpeared in grain, cotton, and stocks a conference at which means for obsimultaneously, and brought about a substantial rally.

The coal receipts for May, the first onth of the 1923 navigation season, totaled approximately 1,600,000 tons. This is one of the largest monthly receipts totals on record, marine men

The total ore tonnage shipped from the head of the lakes exclusive of Escanaba, Mich., was 5,741,791 tons. This is four times the tonnage handled during May, 1922.

The difference in the ore and coal tonnage for the opening month gives an idea of the percentage of boats traveling "light" from lower lake ports to the head of the lakes, according to vesselmen.

One of the few months to pass the coal receipts mark bet during May was October, 1922, when every avail-able craft was pushed into service to bring 1,771,535 tons to the local docks.

Gunsaulus Hall, at the Art Institute, in the vision of Dr. Frank Gunsaulus was intended to house colonial weavings and various handicrafts which this collector and his friends brought together. And while these groups are growing, the regard for them has led to another gallery in the new wing, the Antiquarian Galleries on McKinlock Terrace, which has just opened a small assembly of choice pieces of early American glassware and needlework in colonial samplers.

Mrs. Emma B. Hodge, who assisted

Dr. Gunsaulus in his search for colonial weavings and antiquities, loans the Wistarberg glass and the Stiegel glass, popular in old days and now rare. Miss Elizabeth McCormick and Mrs. Charles B. Pike contribute the specimens of Sandwich glass, among which the native American will recognize the little cup plates made to hold the cup at a time when it was still proper to drink from the saucer.

The Wistarberg glass was made by Caspar Wistar and his son Richard who began blowing flint glass at Wistarberg, N. J., as early as 1739. Utility urged the blowing of window glass and bottles in green, blue and brown, now sought by collectors for a unique quality, and later came those pieces of the loveliest glassware ever produced in early days, in opalescent golden glass and a clear turquoise blue. The blowers twisted two colors of glass in the spiral form, showing that they were craftsmen and artists at the same time, and went on to manipulate thin coatings of glass in patterns on original vessels.

The colonies were struggling in the French and Indian wars, but the mountains and poor roads lay between the march of armies and the first American glass works of that region, and "Baron" Stiegel and his aids perfected articles of flint glass for household use with surfaces beautiful with a soft sheen and graceful in form. The examples chosen from Mrs. Hodge's collection establish a respect for early American crafts increases, the vitality of the movement appears in two act directions. First the exhibiand Stiegel held the art ideal of form and decoration.

The Sandwich glass, an early pressed glass brilliant in its glossy surface, is a United States product of 1825 and after. The Sandwich glass factory made $600,000 worth of glassware annually and employed 500 men. Its first work followed that of older glass works. The glass was blown against the side of a mold. But later a workman named Robinson invented a method by which glass was pressed into a mold. The new machines were operated at a distance from the in-tense heat, and a less expensive glass came on the market. Practice in stitchery and needlework in the colonial days and after, began on the sampler, which when it was done served as a pattern for initials and borders, as well as an example of childhood industry. Framed and in the cases of this colonial exhibit are rare old samplers of the early nineteenth century loaned by Mrs. Maurice Glass, Mrs. Edward Sonnenschein, and Miss Carrie Neeley. The Mary Ann Crook Sam-pler was finished in the ninth year of her age, Sept. 27, 1822. It is extraordinary in the embroidery of rampant lions, little dogs, owls, peacocks and pigeons in cross-stitch, such as are seen on early Moorish and Persian rugs and textiles. As sea captains were numerous in the early days, it is possible that East India drawings or prints found their way to this house-

Lester Pearson's "Books in Black or Red" (New York: The Macmillan Company) is more delectable fare for tive—like "Sweet Pepper." It suggests the bookman than are Mr. A. Yet just alive in us. Whereas Mr. Pearson's first read, but, moreover, the book book is merely a pleasant, meandering dissertation on books and their different aspects, as observed from his post at the New York Public Library. Perhaps the book's chief virtue lies in its reminders of tales and authors long outgrown: Beadle's Dime Library, items from which small boys of the eighties used to smuggle upstairs beneath their jackets to read by candlelight; the excellent nonsense verse which children of the same period found in the pages of St. Nicholas; Carryl's "Davy and the Goblin"; the stories of Frank Stockton; the nonsense verses of Mrs. M. E. Blake and of J. G. Francis, whose "Book of Cheerful Cats" still runs through edition after edition. In an over-serious and burdened age, we are grateful to

THE UNTAUGHT SEA-URCHIN

Neither could we afford to miss a "marrying one after another of seven young ladies of matchless beauty and profound learning." Here Mr. Pearson quotes Mr. Edmund Gosse: "Amory was a fervid admirer of womankind, and he favored a rare type, the learned lady who bears her learning lightly and can discuss 'the quadrations of curvilinear spaces' without ceasing to be a bouncing dear delightful girl' and adroit in the preparation of toast and chocolate." More than all, we welcome the reference to Herbert A. Giles' "A Chinese Bio-graphical Dictionary," that famous treasure-trove over which one of Mr. E. V. Lucas' heroes gloated in "Over Bemerton's." So, after all, Mr. Pearson's book has contributed to our joie de vivre, which is considerable to say of any book.

The influence of titles is positively frightening. Their possibilities range all the way from definite clues to mere blinds. them depends much, yet it is surprisrevealing. So far as outward aspect goes, there is nothing in the least remarkable about this common-place villa, which might belong to any country gentleman living near the town of Rochester. But, as the last and favorite home of Charles Dickens, a home which he had coveted since he first saw the place as a small boywhy, then, is it not incredible that England will permit a slight to the memory of one of the great lights of her literature? Ought it not to belong to the Nation?

Of course, no one can pretend that it matters enormously either one way or the other. It does not affect the enjoyment of a book. But, surely, it is more agreeable to begin the reading of a book with page one, not page certain eighteenth century novel, 9 or page 14. After all, it might quite called "The Life and Opinions of John

A thing which we greatly feared has come upon us-in the shape of an English visitor to Boston who imagines that "Main Street" and "Babbitt' are typically American. The calamity has threatened for some while; now it has fallen. Allusion was made to two books by one of the younger American school of middle western writers; our friend might have heard the titles since Jonathan Cape had published them lately in England. She had read them both and enjoyed them, she said.

To be sure, the action frequently lapses into conventional sentimentalism, where it concerns the behavior of the college professor who pays court to the widow of 38. Her children feel that she should settle down, and like the children of the woman in Barrie's "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire," rather insist on bringing up their mother in the sober way they think she should go. One has a feeling that Clara Bersanger, who made the scenario from Mr. Thomas' play, understands men—less well than women/for the widow and her daughter manifest the little individualizing mental touches in their characterizations that one misses in the widow's son and the professor.

And another adventure into life that vacation offers to the fortunate is through the diverse explorations of newspaper assignments. The junior who gets the reporter's glimpse of a cross section of life as it is lived today, in three crowded amazing months of newspaper work, has much to check up and account for when he goes again to the seats of wisdom for his last year's work. The farm boy particularly needs this stimulating revelation of journalism. The boy who has grown up away from the magic of hills and fields and woods has most to learn from plowed ground and new cut clover. It is too much to ask professors to assign the summer's vacation according to the needs of their students, too much even to ask farmers and editors to employ those ship to life that their fields offer. Corrections and country use, the heavy car with a long body is fast becoming obsolete. The first indication of this in America was the use of two-liter engines at Indianapolis. Racing tests have shown conclusively that we can now build an engine running with perfect safety at 6000 revolutions per minute. The latest development in British racing car engines shows the overhead valves completely inclosed, the engine and unit clean in appearance, the water pump and magneto very accessible, the gear levers and clutch pedal mounted on the change speed box, and the servo motor for the brake operation at the back of the gear levers and clutch pedal mounted on the change speed box, and the servo motor for the brake operation at the back of the gear levers and clutch pedal mounted on the change speed box. The English touring car is built along similar lines, and it is but a question of time when American automobiles will adopt those European features which have proven practical on the track and road.

On July 2, at Tours, France, one of the English entries will use a six-cylinder engine, which is capable of develop-discovering and the benzol from Germany. The price of gasoline is very high in France.

the English entries will use a six-cylin-der engine, which is capable of developing 108 h. p. on the Froude water brake, at 5000 m.m. to 6000 revolutions per minute. The modern speed engine is correctly designed, perfectly bal-anced and turns with the smoothness and precision of a sewing machine. The touring engine of two liters gives between 35 and 40 m. p. h. and is being developed more every day. The valve gear will be lightened, the pushrod form of operation will disappear, and the flat combustion head be missing on many of the new English models. The normal touring car on the Continent will run at a speed of 4000 r. p. m., and will be very much lighter, because the capacity of the engine will be smaller, thus placing less stress on the transmission, with a lessening of fuel consumption, since the higher the com-pression, the greater efficiency obtain-

One of the French cars will use a 12-cylinder engine in the Grand Prix at Tours and in Italy this year. This is an outgrowth from the old oneis an outgrowth from the old one-cylinder engine with a 100x250 mm. stroke, and a piston displacement of 1963 c. c. In the new engine each cylinder has a cubical capacity of ap-proximately 166 c. c., dimensions of 51.4x80 mm. bore and stroke (1992 c. c.), which means that the whole engine is so small as to be almost incapable of visualization. The two blocks of six visualization. The two blocks of six cylinders have an over-all length of only 21 in., and can be tucked under each arm without difficulty. In comparison the housing necessary for all the gear to drive the four overhead campshafts is most voluminous. A spark plug weighs more than a piston. and a single magneto is heavier than all 12 pistons. Two magnetos being required, the united weight of these par-ticular portions of the engine mechanism is greater than all of the rods and combined, and their bulk almost dwarfs the engine.

The cylinders are iron castings in The cylinders are iron castings in blocks of six, with duralumin water jackets screwed on, which not only saves weight, but verifies the cylinder walls and the amount of water space which exists around the valve seats and plugs and the spark plug hole. There is not a plain bearing in the engine with the exception of the gudgeon pins. The crankshaft is machined out of the solid billet, with circular webs, carried in seven roller bearings and receives the I-section, rods which also have roller big ends. Oil is deand the benzol from Germany. The price of gasoline is very high in France. Gasoline received at the port of Rouen at 60 centimes per liter costs 1 france 90 centimes retail in Paris, for state and local taxes are higher than the import price of the fuel. Import duties and transport taxes total 38 centimes per liter, the city of Paris has a local tax of 20 centimes a liter, and the capital immobilized by the necessity of maintaining war stocks of gasoline adds another 10 centimes to the price. As an example of the different state policies, gasoline costing 60 centimes per liter, gasoline costing 60 centimes per liter, gasoline costing 60 centimes per liter, retail in Belgium is sold for 1 franc 50 centimes in France, minimum price.

The idea that closed models would glut the market has been dispelled to a great extent by the orders coming in from the agricultural districts. Farmers, as a rule, have had a very good season and are buying trucks, tractors season, and are buying tracks, tractors and passenger cars. For their use the open car is just as practical as the closed model, as service is the main thought when buying, not looks. The warm weather has also been a factor in increasing the volume of new and used cars. Parts manufacturers are holding back a little, but not as much as during the first of the year when a slump was looked for any day. June promises to keep up the high record of production but there is little expectation of meeting the figures for which ran to 405,000, which is mated to be greater than April by 20,000 passenger cars and 3000 trucks, a new record for the industry. Two of the largest tire manufacturers in the country have announced a cut on casings and tubes. One has reduced the entire line 10 per cent and the other 7 per cent. The cut was entirely unexpected, as the tendency has Middle Ward of Lanarkshire, of which been to increase prices all along the line, rather than reduce them. I have decided, on the invitation of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Lancashire, western division, to hold the September Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge at Liverpool on Sept. 5. I have approved of the visit in July of the Pro Grand Master, Lord Ampthill, with the Grand Treasurer, Sir John Ferguson, and other grand officers, to the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Canada in the Province of Ontario, at Toronto, and to St. John's, Newfoundland, to install the new District Master. Lord Ampthill has now been Pro Grand Master since 1908, a period of 15 years, and I suggest that I have decided, on the invitation of period of 15 years, and I suggest that the Grand Lodge should invite him to sit for his portrait, to be hung in Free-masons' Hall.

There was much applause at these announcements and in consequence of the Grand Master's anouncement with regard to the visit to Canada, Sir Alfred Robbins moved that the deputa tion be charged to convey to Grand Lodge of Canada and to all the brethren in the Dominion the fraternal greetings of the Grand Lodge of England and the expression of their earnest wish to co-operate with them in the maintenance of the tenets of the craft and the objects of Free

On the occasion of the presentation of Hall Stone Medals the Duke of Connaught said: "As I am anxious to see our new Grand Lodge scheme fully developed, and the building commenced during my Grand Mastership: I am for the fund within the next two years, at which I hope to preside."

The motion to admit individual brethren of enemy alien birth on a unanimous resolution of reinstatement by the lodge or lodges to which they belong was defeated with but a few dissentients, Sir Alfred Robbins declaring in a speech which evidently voiced the feelings of the meeting that the board of general purposes, of which he is the president, that such a motion was far too premature and express thence to Berlin, and air from the street was thence to Berlin, and air from the street was thence to Berlin, and air from the board of general purposes, of present takes 115 hours. The new service would reduce this to 60 hours. motion was far too premature and could be worked only with difficulty, as reinstatement in one lodge would, according to Masonic procedure, mean permission to visit any other lodge if invited by any individual member.

THE WORLD MUSIC OF

New Biographer of Handel

By W. H. HADDON SQUIRE London, June 12

WHEN, the other day, Mr. A. G. Gardiner and Mr. Philip Guedalla debated on the subject of "Biographers and Their Victims," Mr. Asquith, who was in the chair, asked "What ought a biography to be? A photograph, a picture, a caricature or a creation?" Some of the best biographies in history, he added, came in one or other of those categories.

Mr. Newman Flower's recently published biography of George

Messiah."

Mr. Newman Flower has discovered that Jennens never compiled the words of "The Messiah" at all. It was the work of Jennens' secretary, a wretched "half-starved little clergyman" named Pooley.

The story of the "Water Music" being written to win back the favor of George I is also, it seems, another biographical blunder. When the "Water Music" was first played in 1717, the King and the composer were the best of friends.

But perhaps the biggest disappointment is reserved for those who have

Mr. Newman Flower has faithfully recorded a life that is one of the big heroic poems of musical biography. His fidelity led him to original research, with the result that many generally accepted "facts" are now shown up as empty fictions. Handel's previous biographers have even started his career at a wrong address. Mr. Newman Flower tells us that Dr. Bernhard Weissenborn, a professor of Halle University and a great Handel student, has discovered recently undeniable evidence that Handel was born not in the house decorated with laurels and the names of his oratorios, but at the house next door. Several generations of pilgrims have wasted their curiosity on the wrong premises.

Great men drag into fame, many who would never earn it for them-selves. Charles Jennens' principal claim on posterity is that of having compiled the libretto of "The Messiah." He was popular in cultured Georgian Society and rich enough to spend £80,000 in laying out the grounds of his country seat. "He would drive down to his publishers in a magnificent carriage, drawn by horses with plumes; with a lackey sitting up behind, whose duty it was to get down and sweep the pavement free of rub bish before his master got out." Handel, himself, preferred a more primitive form of locomotion and walked.

The Real Librettist

Jennens' pride in the libretto was magniloquent. The success of the "Messiah" was his alone. "I will show you a collection I gave to Handel, call'd 'Messiah,' which I value highly," he wrote to a friend, "and he has made a fine entertainment of great difficulty made him correct some of the grossest faults in the composition, but he retained his over-ture obstinately, in which there are ne passages far unworthy of Han-

In giving us a biography that for veracity and interest is one of the best, if not the best, in the English language, Mr. Newman Flower has language, Mr. Newman Flower h terday's newspaper. But after the lapse of nearly 200 years Handel is still in the best sense a "popular" composer. Samuel Butler, the perfervid admirer, asserted that Handel was greater than Homer. "Handel is so great and so simple," he wrote, "that no one but a professional musician is unable to understand him." But, after all. Handel was a very proessional musician.

Handel, in spite of his Saxon birth, may be claimed as an English composer. Perhaps, as Butler put it, he found England more Saxon than Several thousand more on occasion

PECAUSE of the success of the first B summer season of orchestral concerts in Fairmount Park, $40,000 has been appropriated again by Philadelphia's City Council for symphonic performances in the open-air auditorium at Lemon Hill. Last year many thousands of persons were edified and delighted by music of the fied and delighted by music of the highest order. It was dispensed, under the batons of Victor Kolar, Henry Hadley and Thaddeus Rich, by 50 players, most of whom were drawn from the ranks of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Other Programs

On other programs Rimsky-Korsa-koff, Saint-Saëns, Liszt, Humperdinck lected. There was the perennial "Blue Danube." The rippling levity of Nicolai's overture for "The Merry Wives of Windsor" vied for favor with the litting measures of Planquette's "Chimes of Normandy." Felix Weingartner

HEN I met Felix Weingartner quite casually at a social meeting in his honor, given in connection with his recent visit to London, he reminded me that it was nearly 18 years since we had last met. Thrice since then I had seen him on the conductor's rostrum, but the latter of these occasions was as long ago as of these occasions was as long ago as the Haydn Centennial in 1909. Time has given him greater fluency in the English language. Certainly it has not lessened the keen interest he takes in everything and everybody around him. A couple of days later I attended a rehearsal and heard and saw him put the finishing touches to the preparation of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and was struck with the im-mense difference between his stren-uous manner then and the quiet dignity of his concert manner. "The orchestra is splendid," he said afterward, in reply to my inquiry.

"Very attentive and very artistic." Asked about the number of re-hearsals necessary to prepare the

In England generally he found a considerable change for the better since his previous visits. Vienna, which he himself knows so well, has an old culture, a tremendous culture, but it is not always a living culture. London both in its life and its music, so far as he had been able to observe them, was more alive and yet more regulated.

It was like a church, so silent, so listening, so expectant, were the audiences." From this and similar things, he felt that the most extistic things. the most artistic things, the best in-terpretations one could give, would awake an echo in the public. By this time I had begun to notice on my white wall a faint golden glow, that was not sun-light, stretching in a band across. This was especially visible towards evening, and each day the gold was deeper; at last it dawned upon me that what I saw was the color-shadow of the ripening corn thrown by the westering sun.

There it all was—the yellow sun, the golden-tawny field, the red light on the wall. What sense was in this? After some days, as the red light deepened with each evening, I went down to the field. Was it the poppies? No, there were but a few, scattered here and there, and the crimson band on my wall was perfectly regular. Idly I picked an ear and began to strip the grain; and lo! it was what is called red wheat! Every little grain was as red as blood. The sun had found it out and, piercing the yellow husk, had carried the red light abroad.

But who could have imagined that the light of the setting sun could have mixed with the glow of the red corn in the ear and thrown its illumination to such a distance?

PRESIDENT HARDING, in his first address delivered on his western tour, made convincingly clear his present, and probably his future, attitude

Mr. Harding and the World Court and probably his future, attitude toward the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice. In some respects the speech is disappointing. In others it is commendable, because it leaves not the least possible doubt regarding the determination of the President to seek approval by the United States Senate of a treaty establishing that tribunal upon a basis acceptable to the representatives of the political party of which the spokesman is the titular head. It is disappointing, because it indicates a willingness to achieve, through compromise if not actual surrender, an end assured by methods and processes already proved to be adequate and efficient. The President, clearly as a concession to the so-called irreconcilables in the Senate, now not only agrees, but urges, that the World Court, undeniably the creature of the League, be separated from it, that it may be purged of what he seems to be convinced is an inherited impediment.

There is the danger, unless the appraiser is able to divest himself of all confusing influences, that form may be mistaken for substance, and vice versa. The President declares the World Court as at present constituted to be acceptable in substance, but not in form. He does not make it clear that the great end sought through the means of arbitration which the Court affords would be more fully assured by the changes in form which he advises. The end sought he most earnestly desires, as do all Americans and all peoples throughout the world. And it is an encouraging and hopeful portent that the President does not deem it necessary that the nations which have established the World Court, and made of it a virile and potent force in international adjustments and a virtual insurer of peace, "should put aside their very commendable creation because we do not subscribe to every detail, or fashion it all anew and to our liking in every specific detail, before we offer our assistance in making it a permanent agency of improved international relationship."

There is an unavoidable temptation to feel that much of what the President said in St. Louis was directed more to those members of the United States Senate who oppose his policies than to the people whom those senators are chosen to represent. Mr. Harding came to his present high position direct from the Senate. He is still conscious of its insistence that due deference be paid to it, and that full recognition of its treaty-making power be accorded. He looks back in retrospect to the campaign of 1920, the year of his election, and chooses to accept the tremendous popular vote given him as a conscious and final repudiation of the League of Nations by the American people. Rightly or wrongly, he feels that unless the World Court is purged of the supposed taint of its parenthood, "the tide of public sentiment reflected in the Senate" would defeat the ratification of any treaty pledging participation by the United States in the deliberations of that tribunal.

But it may be that the President, in his desire to assure that harmonious action within the councils of his own party which he declares to be necessary to the success of the World Court plan, as that plan includes American participation therein, misinterprets the sentiment of the voters of the United States. It may consistently be claimed that neither in the campaign of 1918 nor that of 1920 did the people repudiate the League of Nations idea. Today the question is seriously raised by practical politicians whether the Harding plurality was a vote against the League or against the methods by which it had been advocated. Is Mr. Harding justified in assuming that the verdict of 1920 was final and irrevocable?

The future may supply convincing proof that the League of Nations marks a progressive step in the evolutionary processes of the world, just as today has made it plain that the Permanent Court of International Justice offers to war-tired nations a release from anarchy, poverty, destruction, and insatiable human hatred. The people of the great American Republic may not care to have it said of them that they have consciously repudiated any agency of good. They yield quick adherence to any and every undertaking which promises the abolition of war. The President has made no mistake in committing them to this high resolve. They will go with him all the way, if that way leads to peace.

The desire of the President, and his purpose as well, is to overcome whatever objections may now exist to America's participation in the Court and its activities. He finds there are those who hold that the creation of the existing Court under a distinct protocol, instead of directly under the Covenant of the League, would "remove every tincture of subservience or obligation." He finds another group composed of those "who, while equally earnest in advocacy of an international tribunal, regard the present Court with suspicion because of its origin." He insists that the United States should give its influence to the Court already established, and to this end would "remove every threatening obstacle worth considering, so we may go whole-heartedly to the world with an authorized tender of support."

How is this to be accomplished? Accepting the words of the President, it must be by the very processes which have been proposed to make the acceptance of the League of Nations plan by the United States both possible and advisable. The President says:

To submit terms which we consider essential to the preservation of our nationality is not an act of discourtesy; it is the only fair, square, and honorable thing a great, self-respecting nation can do. So far from being unfriendly, it springs from a sincere desire, through frank and intimate association, to help to restore stability, and, in the words of Washington, to "cultivate peace" throughout the world.

Thus it is proposed, in relation to the World Court, to do what it has been urged that the United States should do in relation to the League of Nations. For several years the invitation has been extended to America to propose its own terms for membership in that tribunal. Mr. Harding expresses confidence that none of the nations now participating in the deliberations of the Court would regard unkindly any proposed changes in the Court's methods of procedure or perpetuation. That assurance is warranted. Of this there is no doubt. But is any such concession to the irreconcilable opponents of the President's plan sure to bring the accord within party councils that is so sincerely sought? The conviction persists that the present is no time for a resort to mere subterfuge. The concern of the people is not for the success or defeat of any faction of any party. Their obligation, though first to themselves, is to the people of all nations as well. They do not make it a condition that a limit be placed upon their performance by those within any political party. They demand no compromise which may make it appear that they give grudgingly that which they alone can give.

THERE is considerable food for thought in what Irving T. Bush, president of the Bush Terminal Com-

Confidence

and Russia's

pany, said to a correspondent of the pany, said to a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor in Moscow recently regarding the necessity of Russia satisfying the claims of American corporations before it could expect America to re-establish in its favor long-term credits. It is true that present conditions make it appear that Russia is freeing itself from the internal entanglements in which it has been enmeshed during the past few years and that it seems likely that a stable condition of governmental activity may be looked for in the not distant future. Still, before Russia can expect to live down the bad impressions produced during the months of its turmoil and rebirth, it must be willing to apply itself to regain the confidence of those who have found themselves losing that confidence perforce by its seeming disregard of even normal obligations.

In one respect, as Mr. Bush explained, Russia and the United States are similar, both being in a position to produce within their borders everything necessary for their own consumption. Hence, it is extremely likely that Russia will shortly undergo a period of rapid industrial development, just as did America after the Civil War. But for the proper development and restoration of its industrial system, Russia will need capital, and for the supply of that need will probably have to turn to America.

It is not the question of meeting the country's external debts, however, which must be attended to in this connection, but rather simply the settling of those obligations to the large American organizations which in the past have supplied machinery and other necessities in full expectation of payment. Moreover, it is not a matter of immediately liquidating those debts, but of really giving assurance of the intent to pay. Russia is in the position at the present of many a debtor in the past, who has found when he has tried to start afresh, that, besides having right intentions for the future, he must show signs of repentance, associated with a willingness to make reparation for the mistakes of the past. The whole business structure of the world is so delicately adjusted on the basis of faith in the justice and integrity of the participants, that he who loses that confidence is in a parlous way, and must look to it that he regain it as so as possible. Merely to wish is not enough; the will is father to the deed.

RECENT worthy, yet futile, efforts to enact federal statutes designed to prohibit the employment of children

Child Labor

in commercial industries have made clear the necessity of beginning at the foundation, as in the working out of other great national reforms, if the end sought is to be attained. The fact has been well established by court decisions rendered since the adoption of the prohibition amendment in the United States, that constitutional enactments by which the people of a democracy add to or supplement the fundamental law, are never unconstitutional. Thus the majority is enabled to speak definitely and finally in demanding progressive reforms. Against the decision made in what is sometimes referred to as a "solemn referendum" there can be no successful appeal by the minority.

There is no mistaking the sentiment of the American people regarding the matter of child labor. Such restrictions of the practice as have been attempted by federal statute probably have not properly represented public thought. In both the enactments declared unconstitutional by the highest court there was the obvious effort by those who drafted the acts to avoid, if possible, the known probability of running counter to constitutional precedent. With this in view the laws passed were by no means as drastic or as inclusive as was desired. With the knowledge that no comprehensive legislative action is possible under the present interpretation of the Constitution, the only course open is to amend the fundamental law, to allow the full expression of the popular will in acts subsequently to be passed.

Responding to the recommendation made by President Harding in his message to the special session of Congress in December, 1922, members introduced resolutions proposing an amendment. These were favorably acted upon by the committees to which they were referred, but final action providing for the submission of an amendment to the legislatures of the several states was not possible before the short session adjourned on March 4. The decision awaits the convening of the new Congress in December. It is urged by the friends of the proposed amendment that it should give Congress the power to fix a minimum standard of child employment for the entire Nation, while according to the states the right to adopt and enforce higher standards if they choose. It is also wisely proposed that the way be left open for the adoption of higher standards as conditions or ideas of child protection advance.

It is believed that the adoption of a federal standard will serve as an incentive to the states to fix even a higher standard for themselves. It was found when the first federal law was enforced that the several states were quick to establish the fact that their own standards of enforcement were as good, if not better, than those fixed by the federal law. Reference has frequently been made to the wide divergence in the state codes where the regulation of child employment has been attempted. It is an interesting fact that during both the periods when the federal laws were being enforced the improvement in state laws and their enforcement was noticeable. When it once becomes apparent that the federal power has been extended, by constitutional amendment, to an unquestioned control of child-labor conditions, there is little doubt that the states will swing into line almost automatically without direct federal interference.

WILLY BURMESTER'S view, as told to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor in New York, that

ter's Musical

Opinions

the Japanese, in order to complete their place among modern peoples, must take music lessons in the West and must perfect themselves in European formulas of tone, will certainly stand questioning. His actual advice, too, to certain promising young persons whom he met while on his recent concert tour of the Orient, that they pack up and go to Germany or Austria to attend the conservatories of those countries, may with good reason be deplored.

To look at the violinist's reasoning in some detail, such native melody as he heard in Tokyo, where he made a stay of considerable duration, amounts to nothing as foundation for national art. Anyone who tried to develop organized forms of expression out of the dancetunes, for example, of the "No" dramas, would waste his time on something hopelessly primitive. Let the young men and women, of Japan, then, put themselves under the instruction of professors in Berlin and Vienna; for if they do, they will be likely, their extraordinary intellectual powers considered, to bring great things to pass. Indeed, a very few years in schools where the works of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms furnish the basis of study, would suffice to equip them for the highest success, not only in the field of interpretation, but in that of composition as well.

In regard to Japanese students grounding their musical education on German theory and practice-what probability is there of a new type of national music coming from that? For a long time British music students did more or less, according to Mr, Burmester's plan, with little significant showing in the way of com-position. Latterly they have been bestowing on English tradition the thought they used to lavish on German, with a result that appears on the programs of orchestral and chamber-music organizations the world over. Music students of the United States once imagined they could get nowhere without a training at Leipzig. But a symphony of true American sound seems never to have been written by anybody who held that fancy. . A few years ago a Japanese composer, who was drilled in German methods, visited the United States and presented songs and orchestral pieces of a technical merit that could not be disputed. And yet his works failed to win the general recognition of singers and conductors, in spite of their possessing, in addition to correct structure, an undeniable sort of Far Ea tern quality.

As for Mr. Burmester's opinion about the potentialities of Japanese folk-music, it is a perfectly safe one, inasmuch as few experiments of any importance have yet been made with it. But the likelihood is that if the composers of Japan show a disposition to agree with him and neglect to elaborate their historic melodies and rhythms into large vocal and instrumental forms, those of other nations will endeavor to do so. And what the right persons might have achieved seriously, the wrong ones may attempt trivially.

Editorial Notes

Somewhat novel in its purpose and eminently deserving of success is the society which has recently been organized by Sir Campbell Stuart, the Canadian editor of the London Times, for the collection of data concerning Canadian history in Britain and France. Any movement which has for its ideal the establishment of historical truths, to combat the mass of false statement commonly circulated as history, should be supported. Hence it is no surprise that Lady Minto, wife of a former Governor-General, and the Duke of Connaught are co-operating with Sir Campbell.

A STRIKE that was perhaps a little "different" in some respects from the ordinary run of walkouts was staged recently in Dublin, Ireland, when the parliamentary reporters refused to work any longer unless due attention was paid to certain grievances under which they felt they had been laboring long enough. Anyhow, the reporters obtained an unconditional surrender from the Government. Some debates we have known would be none the worse off for not being reported, but presumably the Dail feels that this would not be true of theirs.

Although it is too early to estimate justly the scope and influence of Boys' Week in 1923, it may be stated positively that the movement has become a real national and international affair. Indeed, up to the end of May, at least 600 cities had carried out a Boys' Week program, and practically every continent and more than twenty-five countries had adopted this method of arousing the interest of their adults in their boys. The work has been largely done under the impulse of the Rotary International, and deserves support.

A Chat With W. B. Yeats

DUBLIN, May 30 (Special Correspondence)—"I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree." Ever since that line has been in my memory I have wanted to know W. B. Yeats, but it was an Ulsterman's gibe which really drove me round to 82 Merrion Square.

"We can't waste our time, money, and thought on poet parliaments," said the Ulsterman; and I took it as a direct hit at a poet whose work has a way of making me wish I were Irish. It was, therefore, almost as a champion that I knocked at the door of No. 82, and wondered what member of the poet's household would greet me. The door opened a few inches, and I was startled to see the muzzle of a revolver looking at me. An unmistakably Celtic voice said: "Is it Mr. Yeats you're wantin'? Have you an app'intment?"

The door was unchained; the guard questioned me and toyed, rather too carelessly, I thought, with his revolver. In a couple of minutes I was upstairs, looking at the books on the poet's shelves, surprised at a Balzac and puzzled by a Tagore. Mr. Yeats came in and apologized for the books and the pale, bare walls, "All my rare and valuable books are in the country, together with my pictures," he said. "I thought it safer to keep them there." There was, indeed, a bullet hole in the window. The room had all that pale airiness of coloring which one finds in so much of Mr. Yeats' poetry. It is pale and delicate; its coloring is moonlit; and opening the door and going into his drawing-room was like cutting the pages of a book and coming suddenly upon the elaborate thrill of one of his lyrics. One remembered his lines:

Had I the heavens' embroidered cloths, Enwrought with golden and silver light, The blue and the dim and the dark cloths Of night and light and the half light, I would spread the cloths under your feet.

and wanted to tread almost on tiptoe at the bidding of the last line,

You picture my poet now, standing before the fire, teapot in one hand, kettle in the other, and all the time telling me about the ancient Gaelic manuscripts containing all the blazonry of all the old annals and chronicles, wild legends and poetry, and constituting a literature which was mature at the time of Chaucer.

I sat down while Yeats walked up and down the room, telling me how he had been in lifelong contact with Gaelic legends, and that his own work had been largely founded on the sagas. Quite recently he had proposed in the Senate that a committee should be formed to submit a project to the Government arranging for the translation, editing, and annotation of the old manuscripts. The Senate had adopted the

He returned to the mantelpiece, and by this time the effect of his enthusiasm had been to loosen his collar and to send his tangled bow on a journey toward the back of his neck. He thrust his hand despairingly through his abundant gray hair, and, bending toward the tray, he discovered there was no sugar. Away he went, around the room, out of one door and in by another, in search of sugar, all the time impressing upon me the need for thorough scholars of the old Gaelic, a Gaelic far more difficult than the modern. He went on to tell me of the legends and poetry which are still going unrecorded from mouth to mouth in the wild parts of Galway:

Caolte tossing his burning hair
And Niamh calling Away, come away:
Empty your heart of its mortal dream.
The winds awaken, the leaves whirl round,
Our cheeks are pale, our hair is unbound,
Our breasts are heaving, our eyes are a-gleam,
Our arms are waving, our lips are apart;
And if any gaze on our rushing band,
We come between him and the deed of his hand,
We come between him and the hope of his heart.
The host is rushing 'twixt night and day,
And where is there hope or deed as fair?
Caolte tossing his burning hair,
And Niamh calling Away, come away.

And Niamh calling Away, come away.

a living literature which would disappear in a few years' time unless taken down by scholars. He insisted there was a great Gaelic literature of a kind similar to the English Arthurian legends, and gave it as his opinion, as he wandered about the room again, that the world's conception of the Irishman had got to change. The Irishman was not necessarily a faction fighter, a casual humorist, or an ignoramus; Mr. Yeats thought the best traditions of the Irish race, as found in its literature, could be made gradually to permeate and ennoble Irish thinking. It has been the aim of his work to establish a new and more nearly right conception of the Irishman.

We left the house, and I walked down toward the Senate with him. We finished by discussing the politics of the hour. He said there was little cause for pessimism about Ireland; indeed, those who looked ahead found everything favoring the optimistic view. He mentioned the lack of experience in the Government, but he hoped that in a few years' time the type of man at present in the Senate—the man with some sort of a stake in the country—would be representing the people in the Dail. Saying which he stopped, bent down, unlaced one of his shoes, took it off, shook a stone out of it, and said "Good-by."

Poet parliaments, indeed! Yet, how goes the saying?—
"He made his prophets poets."

The Qualities That Lead to Success

"If I were asked to name the most important things that lead to a successful life," Charles M. Schwab is quoted in The Business Woman as saying, "I should say, first of all was integrity,—unimpeachable integrity. No one can ever do anything of great value in life, and have the confidence and approval of his fellow men, or be successful in his undertakings with other business people, if he does not have the reputation of being a person of honor and integrity. This is the very foundation of a successful life.

"Another important thing is loyalty. Be loyal to the people with whom you associate at the start. Make your employer feel that you are sincere with him; that you are going to promote his interests; that you are going to stand for the things he represents, and that will reap you a richer reward. Loyalty above all!

"A person, to carry on a successful business, must have imagination. He must see things in a vision, a dream of the whole thing. You can cultivate that faculty only by an application of the finer things of life.

"Be friends with everybody. When you have friends, you know there is somebody who will stand by you. Lead a life that will make you kindly and friendly to everyone about you, and you will be surprised at what a happy life you will lead.

"These things secure opportunity. That secured, there comes the need of good judgment, which is one of the prime requisites for enduring success."
